

De Sapio to Talk Next Thursday

Carmine G. De Sapio, Tammany Hall leader, announced yesterday that he would appear at the College next Thursday 12:30 PM. He will speak on "The Vitalization of the Democratic Party" in the Finley Grand Ballroom.

Mr. De Sapio was invited to speak here by the Conference of Democratic Students (CDS). Allen Ferman, president of the group said that he had invited Mr. De Sapio because "he is a good, interesting and controversial" figure in national politics.

Mr. De Sapio, the first Italian to head Tammany Hall, was chosen in 1949.

After last year's elections, he was charged with "boss-like" tactics.

Carmine G. De Sapio
Tammany Chief

De Sapio was elected to the position by an opposition group led by Eleanor Roosevelt and former Air Force Secretary Thomas K. Finley.

Since then, Mr. De Sapio's reputation has met with considerable dispute.

Ferman said that he "expects a good turn-out because we feel that he has a great deal to say and we assume that students will come to hear him with great interest."

However, Ferman added, "I doubt that Mr. De Sapio will meet with as rousing a reception as Jean Shepherd did when he appeared here."

Campaign in Cafeteria Is Called 'Successful'

The campaign to provide eating space in the South Campus Cafeteria between the hours of 11 AM and 2 PM is proving a success, according to Joseph Raviol, cafeteria manager.

Some students, however, have objected to the campaign and to the tactics employed by the management. Cafeteria employees and Burns Guards in plain clothes hand out cards stating the cafeteria policy and requesting students who are not eating to leave.

Mr. Raviol said, "Even during the rush hours we do not always ask students who are not eating to leave. We do this only if there are no empty tables for students with food."

There were, however, complaints from students. Sandra Chernick, an upper sophomore, said, "It is very pleasant to relax and talk with friends while drinking a cup of coffee. The cafeteria campaign to stop this is disgusting."

"Many of my friends are eating at restaurants near the school,"

Kennan; Western Capitalists Aided Soviet Solidification

Short-sightedness caused by capitalistic interests was mainly responsible for Russia's rise to power in the 1930's, said George F. Kennan yesterday in his last of a series of three History Department sponsored lectures.

The former United States Ambassador to the Soviet Union explained that trade-hungry Western business interests unwittingly aided the Russians in their plans to become stronger than the West.

Overeager Western firms, he said, either failed to recognize Russia's intentions or disregarded them, each fearing that its competitors would monopolize Russian trade.

This fear, Mr. Kennan said, helped the Russians. Western exports of industrial materials enabled the Soviet Union to build up its industrial empire.

"Even nations," continued the Professor, "were motivated by this fear. Great Britain in 1921 signed a trade agreement with Russia. She did this because she feared that Germany would get a large order from Russia."

"Despite this Anglo-Russian agreement, it was German recognition of the USSR in the Rapallo Treaty of 1922 that destroyed Western hope of isolating Russia," said Professor Kennan.

He emphasized, however, that Germany did not want to recognize Russia. "British and French insensitivity and callousness toward German diplomats forced Germany to sign the treaty," said the Professor.

Another factor that prompted Germany to recognize Russia was a fear that the Soviet Union would she said. "They can relax while eating, the food is better and the prices are reasonable. If the cafeteria can not accommodate all the students that wish to use it, the facilities should be expanded."

Ellen Schwartz, an upper freshman, said that the cafeteria was justified in asking students to leave. "I do not feel that it is right for some students to sit and read while others are wandering around with trays of food."

Mr. Raviol said, "There is no reason to use the cafeteria for reading and talking. On the South Campus we are fortunate to have many study halls and lounges. On the North campus there are no such facilities and the cafeteria is crowded at noon."

enforce reparations rights given her in the Versailles Treaty, said Professor Kennan.

Even while Russia was negotiating treaties with the West she kept up a steady tirade against the Democracies, he continued. However, when famine struck the Soviet Union in 1922 she accepted 778,000 pounds of food from the Hoover Commission.

The Commission, despite the fact that it was hampered by lack of transportation, saved an estimated eleven million lives and prevented much suffering, said the ex-Ambassador.

Dizzy Gillespie Attends 'Bird' Parker Tribute

By BARBARA SCHNEIDER

Dizzy Gillespie has the blues on his mind. The searching, sweeping, soulful blues as he and other musicians gather in a tribute to the late jazz artist Charlie (the Bird) Parker in the Finley Grand Ballroom from 12-2 PM today.

"Parker was the other half of my heartbeat," Dizzy has said.

Parker was one of the leading luminaries of the modern jazz school. He on the alto saxophone, along with Dizzy, one of the most versatile trumpeters, and Lester

Young on the tenor sax, are considered to be the progenitors of bop.

"Bop, the first movement before progressive jazz, was more intellectual than all preceding forms and was more demanding in technique and harmonic skill on the part of the musician than preceding types," said Arnold Rosen, Vice President of the Modern Jazz Society, which is sponsoring the tribute.

"Dizzy has his own band and has toured all over the world for the

Political Charters Goes To SFCSA

In a crash program to gain a charter, the proposed undergraduate political party will seek final approval of its constitution today.

The Democratic Forum and Union will present its charter at this afternoon's meeting of the Student-Faculty Committee on Student Activities (SFCSA).

Student Government President Renee Roth and three past SG leaders first made known on Monday plans to form the group. The three past presidents are: Bart Cohen, SG leader in the fall of 1957; Steve Nagler, who succeeded Cohen in office; Mike Horowitz, last term's SG President.

Miss Roth said, describing the group, "Communists, racists, totalitarians of any stripe cannot in good faith subscribe to our principles. I am well aware that anti-democrats often act in bad faith and could conceivably infiltrate our organization."

But, Miss Roth said, "... it will be a sad day for the College when liberal democrats cannot succeed in maintaining effective and articulate organization."

Twelve prominent student leaders joined the as yet unofficial group Tuesday.

Last night the members of SG

Renee Roth
Group Initiator

Executive Committee held a special meeting to consider the Forum and Union's charter, enabling it to go before SFCSA today. The constitution was unanimously approved after being revised in certain technical aspects during the course of the session.

Nagler explained the reason for the rushed formation program:

"Since many people had requested information on the group, it was felt by the four people who started it that all due haste was called for in presenting to the student body what the organization, structure and purposes would be like."

The main functions of the group, as outlined in the charter, will be to provide a forum for outside speakers on "great issues of intellectual and political interest" and to nominate students for positions in SG and generate interest in that organization.

Talks Set on Cafeteria Rule

An open hearing to air grievances concerning the cafeteria will be conducted next Wednesday by the Student Government School Affairs Committee.

This decision was made at yesterday's Student Council meeting. All students will be welcome, according to School Affairs chairman, Ted Grish. Grievances will be heard and suggestions made to the committee's members. The hearing will be in Room 332 Finley at 3 PM.

In another action, Council passed a resolution supporting Congressional action for federal aid to education.

A bill which has been introduced to Congress, by Senator Hubert Humphrey (Dem.-Minn.), supports federal scholarship assistance, tax rebates for parents or students who spend a major portion of their incomes on higher education, and federal assistance for school construction and rehabilitation.

Council urged students to show their support by writing letters to Senator Humphrey and to the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Quick Work

The College is notorious for the rigamoro involved for organizations seeking charters. It is not uncommon for groups to appear several weeks in a row before the Student Government Executive Committee and the Student Faculty Committee on Student Activities (SFCSA) before having its Constitution approved.

In light of this, the fact that the Democratic Forum and Union has managed to accomplish in four days what other groups take weeks to achieve appears to be indicative of its future path.

By coming so far along in so short a time the Forum and Union has demonstrated two factors which are strongly in their favor as they seek formal entrance into the College's political world.

First, that they are experienced and know their way about in College politics.

They cannot be accused of being novices. Second, that they appear to be a dynamic group and should they apply this vitality to their fields of endeavor, constructive results will almost certainly be forthcoming.

They have held back for the present in declaring actual plans because they are as yet unchartered. Granted a charter, they no longer will have an excuse for vague statements and will be forced to produce a concrete program.

All that remains is for SFCSA to approve this groups Constitution. We strongly urge it to do so.

Who's Wrong?

Last month the Finley Center Cafeteria management stated that between the hours of 11 AM and 2 PM the Cafeteria is to be used only for eating.

This was done because students with food often could not find seats during the rush hours.

Despite the fact that such a policy is necessary some students are complaining. The management, they claim, is arrogant, pig-headed and disgusting. They decry the lack of atmosphere in the lounges, study-halls and libraries on campus.

We believe that these students are wrong. The management is not enforcing the ruling in an arbitrary manner. Students are excluded only when there is a lack of space.

Our sympathies lie with the student who must wander around the cafeteria with a tray of rapidly cooling food, unable to find a seat.

Those students who enjoy the atmosphere in the cafeteria must resign themselves to the fact that between the hours of 11 AM and 2 PM the cafeteria will be used for eating — not socializing, reading or sleeping.

PRO-FESTIVAL

To the Editor:

As one who was fortunate enough to attend the 1957 Moscow Youth Festival, I would like to object to certain errors of fact and conclusion in the Feb. 18 issue of Observation Post.

In addition to several errors in fact concerning the organizations participating in the Festival and its possible "Communist domination," the editorial in OP was frankly appalling.

It was my impression that editorials are conclusions based on fact, not creative efforts where honored journalistic tenets are dumped by the wayside. Does OP consider the sleeping schedule or night-time activity of an unnamed "important figure" substantial evidence to damn the Festival? Or, in fact, the assumed dire misdemeanors of this mysterious Mr. X? It is rare to encounter attacks based on such "information."

OP should take into account that any "orientation period" to alleviate some of the world's tensions is better than none. OP or SG officials need not be worried or "pessimistic" about the possible good of the Festival or its "domination." I can personally attest to the fact that during my 14-day stay in Moscow, there was not one event designed to further any particular ideology, but there was instead a program designed to enable youth from every part of the world to meet each other and talk.

City College students will not, in any way, be "tainted" by association with young people from Communist countries. Instead, they may help to make a world in which we can all understand each other.

Sincerely,

SENIOR CLASS FEES

To the Editor:

The Senior Class Council believes it is doing the most good for the most individuals this semester by covering the cost of cap and gown, the Farewell Ball, a class gift for the school, funds necessary for the Alumni Association, plus other expenses such as mailing and advertising in one sum. When the Class Council Executive Board met to determine its policy for the spring semester, it was decided that the best policy was to lump all costs together while still keeping that total cost at a substantially lower level than it would be if the seniors decided to rent a cap and gown on an individual basis. This is greater than the total charge set by the Senior Class.

Had the Farewell Ball been charged for separately, the substantial number of persons attending would have paid much more than they are now paying. It would also have been impossible to ascertain the number of persons attending, thus the gala ball that is now in the process of materializing, could never have been achieved.

We also feel that it is the moral obligation of every senior to help purchase a gift for the College that has given him an excellent, free, four year education. Of course, certain individuals may find it very difficult to meet the prescribed costs. These hardship cases will be given a cap and gown at no cost.

Lady Cagers Triumph Dominique Scores 37

The Women's Basketball team made a stirring second half comeback last night and defeated St. Josephs, 63-53 before a packed crowd at Park Gym.

This game marked the end of a season that saw the girls post a 7-3 record. It also marked the end of the basketball careers of Betty Castro and Elaine Feinberg who graduate in June.

Mary Dominique
Star Forward

The game started off with both teams playing sloppily. The girls fell behind 15-11 at the quarter and trailed 33-27 at the half.

Graduates Spark

However, sparked by the floor play of the two graduates; Castro and Feinberg, and the spectacular shooting of Mary Dominique, the girls pulled even at the end of the third stanza, 45-45.

The final period was all Laverder as the squad scored the first eight points of the period. They breezed the rest of the way and won 63-53.

Before the final buzzer, Elaine Feinberg who played her whole career as a defensive player was switched to the offensive unit so that she could take the last shot. She missed a very long set.

"These have been the best five years of my life," said a dejected Betty Castro after the game, "I wish it didn't have to end."

Elaine Feinberg had the same expression on her face as Betty only her eyes were a little wetter. "I'm very sad," she managed to say. This was very obvious.

Among the interested spectators was Hector Lewis who must have been taking on Mary Dominique. The high scoring Beaver had "off night" tallying 37 points.

currer one year in the Oxford-Cambridge squash racquets meet," Wagner remembered with a lingering smile, "when we were tied at two matches apiece and I won the 'decider' under tense and severely strained conditions.

"I guess beating Cambridge at anything," he continued, "was the goal of all Oxford men, and to be the hero of a victory an undeniable thrill.

"That same year I was selected to play in the British Amateur Championships," the English Professor went on, "and didn't fare too badly considering the calibre of my opponents."

Past Recalled

He fondly recalled those high-spirited days at Oxford. The nattily-dressed teacher, who bears a striking resemblance to actor James Mason, then reflected upon his American athletic experiences.

"In 1948, I came to the United States to teach English at the University of Rochester. I also managed to find the time to be assistant coach of the soccer team for the three years I was there."

Wagner also competed in squash racquets and won the city championships two years going.

However, at City the well conditioned athlete-teacher has not worked with the soccer team, except as a part time observer.

The Briton explained his vicarious position thus: "I never seem to have time to practice or instruct the sport, even though I do manage to swim every day at the college's pool to keep in shape."

Most of the doctor's free time has been consumed by writing eight novels, the most recent of which, "A Summer Stranger", will be released in England this Summer.

Prof. Geoffrey Wagner
Prolific Novelist

This teacher of Greek and Roman classics is proud of his literary background and mentioned that John Osborne (of "Look Back in Anger" fame) took an option out on his recent novel "Rage on the Bar", for an upcoming film venture.

Compares Merits

In comparing the Beaver soccermen with those at Oxford and Cambridge, the professor placed the college's team just below "the level of play attained at these universities. There are some excellent players here at City, and a fine defenseman like John Paranos could easily make the varsity eleven at both schools."

When asked if coach Karlin were to offer him a position as an assistant coach for the soccer team, Dr. Wagner sadly exclaimed that he would have "to politely say no."

I wonder if anything can be done by the administration to enable Geoffrey Wagner to aid the soccer team with his invaluable experience?

British Soccer Champ Becomes English Prof.

By LARRY GOTTLIEB

"Two years ago I covered the City College Soccer team in the Metropolitan Title finale for a British newspaper The Observer. This pleased Coach Harry Karlin and others interested in publicizing the sport."

Such a statement would have raised some eyebrows if a visiting British correspondent had said it. But when an English professor at the College recalled the incident, there must have been more to the story than meets the monocle.

Only a man with a vast background in soccer would seem worthy of covering an American match for an English paper. And Professor Geoffrey Wagner (English) fits this bill.

Background Reviewed

Prof. Wagner was born in Malaya in the early twenties (exact date unknown due to the Professor's vanity towards age) and came to Britain at the age of seven to begin his prep school education and athletic career.

The young Englishman advanced rapidly in his favorite pastime, soccer. He played on the British Public Schoolboy team, indicative of his skills in the number one European sport.

"I gained a good athletic reputation in my prep school days and this enabled me to be selected for varsity soccer trials at Oxford in my freshman year," Dr. Wagner reminisced recently.

"I made the varsity and held the rare distinction of being one of the few frosh in the club," he said.

At Oxford, the slender athlete played right-half and was elected vice-captain of the team. Actually, he held a dual position. He was also the squad's manager and secretary, responsible for mailing invitations to Oxford's seasonal opponents for upcoming matches.

At the conclusion of his athletic career at Oxford he received a "Blue", equivalent to the American letter in sports, but more select.

There are no substitutions in European soccer and one must play full-time in every varsity game to even be considered for recognition.

In his undergraduate days, the Professor played for the Oxford City soccer squad in a division comparable to that of minor league sports in the United States.

A diversified athlete, Doctor Wagner also competed in squash racquets and court tennis in his college years.
