Student Fees In CU On Rise; Brooklyn's Increase Is Highest

By MARK BRODY

Spiraling costs have added fee at another City University school and may soon lead to increases at others.

Brooklyn College has exceeded the increase here by raising its student fee $20 this fall. Expansion has nearly doubled operating costs at Queens College and raised the possibility of a fee hike from the present $4.

YAF Sees Referendum Bias; Plans To Run Own Campaign

The College's chapter of Young Americans for Freedom (YAF) has announced plans to conduct an independent candidate on the school-wide draft referendum if the student-faculty referendum committee has "a bias against the war in Vietnam.

YAF President Steve Schlesinger charged that five of the eight representatives of the referendum are opposed to the war in Vietnam, and feared "their political views will color their survey." He also announced that "if the referendum is conducted, a YAF representative will attend the meeting of the committee to determine its impartiality."

Steve Schlesinger, YAF's temporary chairman, said the group would continue to "demand that the referendum be conducted by the student body, not by the faculty or school officials."

Aftertaste of A Bard

By NOE GOLDWASSER

We walked the six blocks through the Stuyvesant Plaza to Second Avenue and Seventh Street. We were invited to a churchyard, with the kind of mental sculpture you never see in such places — abstract forms of tin and steel. This was St. Marks-in-the-Bouwerie, a haven for poets, playwrights, and filmmakers.

We entered a large room with yellowish light, and smoke rising slowly to the high ceiling. The room was filled by forty or fifty people, seated in straight chairs, looking as if they were united by a common bond, a kind of shared art for that font near the front so that I could maneuver my camera.

I decided to go and hear him read. I had learned from Miss Leverton that a poem must be heard to be appreciated — a poem is a sculpture.

Blackburn's poems are pictures, conjuring images of a nostalgic past and a worldly humorous present. They speak of the world of the Lower East Side, of grizzly old men who seem to be unjustly aging in bars, or just listening to the world as it goes by; of Jewish streetwalkers who face the grave problem of keeping their hands warm; of little Puerto Rican girls, "Shirley Temples" seen in Washington, D.C., and seen in New York in 1956. Two years later she began performing at clubs across the nation, receiving favorable notices from several critics, including Robert Shelton of the New York Times, who said, "Miss Hester has a brand new local range...and how.

Other "available spots" are the lawn between Cohen Library and Finley Center, the tennis court next to Wagner Hall and the garbage dump below the South Campus Lawn.

The proposed parking lot was made necessary when plans for a Science and Physical Education Building on Jasper Oval called for ending faculty parking there. A new building for the School of Education had been planned for the lawn near Moti Hall, but the administration said that the building will be part of the proposed Commons.

The student activities are being prepared by the College's Commission on Planning and Design, headed by Dr. Albert D'Andrea (Chem., Art).

D'Andrea declined to comment, except to say that the Commons project should come from the president's office.

Cafeterias' Prices Up; Higher Expenses Cited

By DANIEL WEISMAN

The cafeterias on both South Campus and North Campus have raised their prices this year.

"The cost of food has gone up much, and the payroll has gone up tremendously," the cafeteria manager, Joe Korson, explained. "Last year we lost $27,000, and there is no current coming up. We couldn't take it any more," he added.

The change, affecting about 75% of the food, has raised prices 10% over last year. Among these items affected are frank-Master Plan?

"Master Plan" is a misnomer; maybe administrators will admit that. It has been changed from a scheme to develop construction projects haven't been begun. the College to a haphazard construction program, changed through haphazard planning.

Among administrators, faculty and students traditionally complain about, what about other facilities? What will happen at the Bookstore, which is too crowded already? What about the far-too-limited eating facilities?

These are real problems and they have been ignored, or lost in the shuffle that goes on at the City University and New York City. Into this vast abyss of red tape have fallen the plans to obtain the High School of Music and Art Building for College use, the plans of students and instructors for smaller classes, and their right to be heard.

The College is caught in a vise — by lack of space, lack of money, and the goal of helping all students who want an education. It may be too late to get out, but we should try.

The College needs a real master plan — one decided upon with consideration for all the changing components of the College, and drawn up after open hearings in which the members of the College community can take part.

The goal of the College is clear — to provide free higher education to all students who want it. But this goal can't be realized through haphazard planning.

The situation is serious — we may be at the crossroads between accepting more students or maintaining high academic standards. The decision shouldn't be made behind closed doors.

An Easy Task

The student-faculty-administration committee to compose the draft referendum meets today for the first time. It should be the last. It is no difficult task to draw the questions that will appear on the referendum. The faculty referendum could be transferred almost wholesale to this more encompassing one.

Rushing and delay in the drafting of the referendum will serve only to dull its impact, and reduce the length of time that groups and individuals will have to air their views. The emphasis should be on the campaign around the 15-20 and not the basically mechanical process of composing the questionnaire.

"I plan to bring up a resolution that the administration be condemned for not consulting with students before the fee raise," said Professor Watts at a press conference.

Watts, general chairman of the Brooklyn College Democratic Club, has been an active participant in the move to reverse the administration's decision to raise tuition by $100. He proposed the referendum, which was passed by a vote of 12 to 15 faculty members he contacted in the last six months from now?"

"I have not gone looking for people to do the same thing. The Snack Bars and Snack areas are not part of the cafeterias and are managed independently. Korson stated proudly. "We have ten varieties of the College as it is."

Slum Attitudes on Education Defeat Youth

by Nancy Gould

Participants in the College's Cultural Center conducted by Student Government last year seem to be victims of a disease common among travelers: culture shock. They have temporarily suspended activities to decide whether they have the right to "impose our own values on two culturally independent groups," namely, Negro and Puerto Rican children.

If the purpose of the Center is to enrich and facilitate the formal education offered in the Harlem elementary schools, then the students working with the children must adhere to certain attitudes if they are to succeed.

BOOTERS TIE PRATT IN OPENER, 2-2; STILL IN RUNNING FOR LEAGUE TITLE

By ARTHUR VOLBERT

On a dreary, drizzling affternoon yesterday the College’s Soccer team opened its recent season by tying Pratt, 2-2.
The College’s offense looked negligible in large part to the absence of center-forward Andy Popadopoulos, who couldn’t cut even an engineer’s class. The rest of the forward line had trouble adjusting to the moves of the new center-forward and many passes to him went awry.

Nevertheless, the Beavers were on the attack most of the game and outshot Pratt 28-12. But due to their lack of cohesion and an outstanding Pratt goalie, they could push only an equal number of shots through the net.

All the scoring of the game was done in the first half. Pratt started very slowly, but contin­ ed to lead the game most of the opening quarter.

With 8:38 gone in the period there was a scramble for the ball around the Beaver net. Pratt’s Mychalj got the ball and booted a low line kick which booced off his teammate Sydor, and into the Beaver goal.

The Lavender, however, evened the score with 2:05 left to play. Mike Nigro was awarded a penalty kick after being fouled close to the Pratt goal, and cashed it in to make the game 1-1.

Pratt went ahead again, 2-1, right at the start of the second quarter, when with 21 seconds remaining, Goldman lofted a high pass to Dimitri Hamelos who promptly shot it into the net.
The Beavers put constant pressure on Pratt in the second half, but just couldn’t get a tally. They came closest to a score with six minutes left. Goldman lobbed a high pass to Dmirti Hamelos who jumped high into the air and with an acrobatic contortion headed the ball toward the corner of the net. But the Pratt goalie made a spectacular diving save to stop it from going in.

With ten seconds left in the period, Pratt’s Cudzynowski lashed a high liner toward the Lavender net. Beaver goalie Dave Danishel leaped and just man­aged to get his fingers on the ball to tip it over the goal bar.

Coach Ray Kliveka was generally pleased with the team’s performance, Pratt has a much stronger team than last year, he said, and is one of the better teams in the league.

The tie, he feels, will still keep the Beavers in the running for the Metropolitan League chamopionship, if they can do well against LIU and NYU.

play, Olivier Avenans commented, “There is some wisdom to be learned from inter-student and inter-teacher rapport. The lawn is one of the only places left where we can meet on an informal basis.” Smiling, he added, “Where are we going to play ball, in the Dust Bowl?”

One student was in favor of the plan: “I think they should build here. If it means more kids ginning in, I support it. I was in the same boat once.”

Some notable reactions ranged from “Admit students, but not buildings and get teachers,” to “School of Education is so bad it doesn’t pay to enlarge it.” Many people agreed that the College is too big already. One or two didn’t believe that Gallagher would do it. “It’s a lot of talk, no one is out there surveying.
