College Loses Professor Clark

IS PRESIDENT OF UNIVERSITY OF NEVADA FROM JAN. 1, 1918 ON.

Professor Clark, head of the department of political science, will leave the College on January 1, 1918, to be-come president of the University of Nevada. This announcement, a great shock to all his associates, was made public last Friday by President Mezes. Walter E. Clark entered the service of the College as a tutor in philosophy in 1901. In 1902 he became an inassistant professor. When the department of political science was organized in 1907, he was made its

The introduction of modern business courses into the curriculum is in a large measure due to the activity of Professor Clark. The social science course is a development for which he was also largely responsible.

Professor Clark's method of teaching has always been to cut away from the text books. In the prescribed courses he made it clear that political science was not a musty theoretical affair but a vital necessity in the world of business and recognized as such by all big concerns. In the more advanced work he made the student do independent reachest almost exclusively.

As a member of committees con-cerned with the administration, of the College, Professor Clark always tried to make its scope broader and to give more people a share in its advan-

The University of Nevada is situated in Reno. It consists of a college de-partment, and schools of engineering, mining, agriculture and teachers training. The institution is co-educational. It is a land grant college and as such has the consequent relations with the has the consequent relations with the government. There is officially established military training, which until the outbreak of the war was in charge of a regular army captain. There are 400 students in the college.

The plant consists of a 68-acre campus, with 12 buildings. There is a 250-acre farm for the agricultural students, which is six miles out of Reno.

The president of the university is also a member of the board which has charge of the entire primary and sec-ondary educational system The other members are the governor and the elected superintendent of education. The president is also an administra-tive member of various public bureaus

David B. Steinman, '06, who has acted as assistant engineer in the construction of the Hell Gate Connecting Bridge, and who for several terms has been giving courses in the evening session, has been appointed professor of civil and mechanical engineering in

He will have the rank of associate professor.

The late Professor Parmly was to have been professor of engineering His death made necessary the division of his work. Professor Goldsmith will take the courses in electrical engineering. There will be no head of department for the present.

ENGINEERS ACTIVE

Last Thursday the C. C. N. Y. Engineering Society held its first meeting and decided to hold its meetings Tuesday at 1 p. m. in room 102. Pro-fessor Fox and the other members of the engineering staff have promised to co-operate with the society. There are still a few vacancies left for new members, preferably juniors and seniors.

Prof. Howard Woolston, of the Department of Political Science, addressed the Social Problems Club on Friday, September 21, on "Socialism."

"The avowed purpose of our participation in the present great world conflict," he declared, "is to make the world safe for democracy. But democracy is not the ultimate solution of the world's problems. It is when democracy is at last attained that the freed people must take stock of their new-found liberties and decide what they ought to do with them.

"The great problem of social recon-struction—how to build up society anew, with freedom as its basis, how to rehabilitate the shattered remnants of states—that is what will occupy men's thoughts and direct their ener-

1920 PUSHES BALL TO VICTORY— NOVEL CONTEST THRILLS

1920 drew first blood from the freshmen in the organized fresh-soph activities when they pushed their way to victory behind the push-ball last Friday afternoon in the Stadium. The set-to with the ball was an innovation received with great favor by the crowd which had gathered in the stand and around the field long before the affair started.

At four-thirty, an hour and a quarter after the chemical building had "And anything that affords us a ter after the chemical building had wider scope, a broader horizon deserves our thoughtful consideration and discussion. Such a thing is the co-operative basis of society which socialism affords."

Professor Woolston urged against any dogmatic acceptance of the creed of the great master and sponsor of trailed the 'twenty crew led by an Socialism. Carl Marx for Marx awful looking dog, probably the sign of the class. Cheers over, hearts beating, toes ready, the whistle blew and two runners, one from each side, followed by the rest of the class. rushed out from between the posts at either end of the field and hurled themselves at the big leather ball in the middle of the field.

But the soph runner was faster than the teach bader by a fifth of a second and when the ball bounced from his body to that of the '21 man the impact was so great that even Marceline could not have made a better tumble than did that unfortunate freshman.

Then they pushed and rushed; drew back and rushed; yelled and rushed; and rushed. At intervals of five minutes they were given short rests and then went at it again. The best part of the show was when the freshmen got ambitious and raised the ball up into the air for a gain of fifteen yards; but that was all they got. After the first fifteen minute push the freshmen had the ball on their side but at the last moment it was returned by a big drive from '20 and the sophs were declared winners by about a yard.

The Frosh Executive Committee is laying plans however to come beach.

Alumni are not only invited, but urged and entreated to mail immediately to the Alumnus Editor, at the College, all news items that concern them News is not likely to reach the editor while it is still news unless you send it yourself.

To Brother Alumni;-

When you elected me to honorary membership in your body, you welcomed me into your fraternal circle. It is in that spirit that I am taking the opportunity offered by the Alumni issue of The Campus, as it opens another year of its fine service to the College, to welcome you also to another year of service. May this great and solemn year of our nation's effort mean to our circle a closer drawing together in mutual trust and helpfulness. You may feel assured that the College is putting forth every effort to accomplish the high purpose for which it was established; the upbuilding of competent, earnest and patriotic citizens for our

But while carrying on the older activities undiminished and unimpaired, every available energy of the College is now being directed to the special need of the moment, the training and mobilizing of a citizen army in and behind the lines. The special forms of our many enterprises you can learn by visiting the College, or by reading the successive issues of this Alumni Page. Will you not keep watch for each new effort, and will you not step forward with vigorous volunteer assistance wherever your loyalty tells you that you can be of practical help to us—and through us to our country.

S. E. MEZES.

Dear Brothers:--

So much has been going on this summer in our collegiate and alumni circles that we can only hope to summarize it for you very briefly on the present page. The most strictly alumnus activity was the City College Ambulance Unit. A circular was sent out to you in June asking subscriptions totalling fifteen thousand dollars, to finance buying and sending an ambulance unit to France. So generously did you respond that Professor Frederick Robinson '04, who had the matter in charge, soon found the fund over-subscribed. The ambulance was sent; and is now on duty in France. The subsorthers unanimously refused to take back their excess subscriptions and directed that these be applied to other war uses. Hence we have been enabled to do several smaller things in France in the name of the College. Most important among these has been the paying of our share in establishing the "American College Men's House" in Paris, a sort of home or official center for our comrades in the army abroad.

As a natural reflex from war activities, the completion of our Library Fund has been postponed. The committee having this in charge deemed it inopportune to press any request for this money upon our friends, when war needs were so much more immediate. The fund will continue to accumulate slowly, until the time comes to give it again a foremost place.

Probably the most striking war change within the Coilege itself was the installation of a Summer Session. This was begun partly to enable men to complete their work more rapidly and so free them for public service. Several students who had almost finished their collegiate course in June, attended the Summer Session, and there won their bachelor degrees of art or science. Some eight years ago the College started conferring degrees in February as well as in June, graduating half-yearly classes. Now it starts, for the first time in its history, conferring degrees in September. Moreover the Summer Session was so successful both in attendance and in results that it seems likely to become a permanent part of our activities. Like the brook, we may now flow on, or chatter on, forever. Nearly two thousand students attended the Summer Session, over five hundred being men from the regular day-college course who thus brought their graduation appreciably nearer. Several of the courses were of a distinctly patriotic character, that is, they were aimed to prepare men for the war.

Among other activities was the military census of the alumni begun by the College in May. This was completed, tabulated and transmitted to the Government board, which is employing the information with that forwarded by other colleges.

· The College housed during the summer the local draft exemption board, number 145. This board was under the mans rustee Mr. Charles Tuttle. It was the first board in the city to begin work; and its first set of drafted men, forty-two in number, left for Yaphank from the College on the morning of September 21st. The College gave them a hearty send off in easily conscripted

A new department was added to our curriculum last spring, the Department of Engineering. Our sorely lamented comrade Professor Parmly, '88, had this in charge and began its organization with a direct aim toward patriotic service. One of its courses, given at the Summer Session, was in telegraphy and telephony, the scientific side of the work needed by every soldier in the Signal Corps.

This fall we have gone still further into directly helping Uncle Sam. A company of one hundred soldiers of the Signal Corps have been actually bivouached at the College, and are being trained here in all the branches of their work. Think of it! The auditorium of Townsend Harris Hall is turned into a barracks; and there a hundred men sleep—as much as their comrades will let them—every night, and there they eat by day. They are fine, manly looking fellows too, whose intelligent self-restraint prevents them from causing any serious disturbance to our teaching work. Their presence does much to strengthen the patriotism of our own younger students, who mingle with them eagerly in the few minutes which the soldiers flud for relaxation. The only objection which some of our older men find to the situation is the increasing swarm of nursemaids on our campus. No earlier inmates of the College ever attracted such a permanent audience.

We are taking up also the course in military training prescribed by the New York State law of 1916. This required that youths of 16, 17 and 18 years of age should receive a certain amount of military training, either in connection with their school work, or else outside. For all who attend school it is far simpler to combine this training with the scholastic work, so most public institutions are taking up the work this fall. We have gathered and enrolled our youths and soon shall have about a thousand of them drilling in the State Armory on Fort Washington Avenue.

There is one more activity which the alumni are taking upon themselves; and this calls for your co-operation. We men whom age or some other deterrent to ce holds—perhaps only temporarily from our country's battle line, must at least keep full record of our younger brothers at the front. Their sacrifice will be its own allsufficient reward; but it is our part to see that the memory of not one single sacrifice is lost. Will you not report at once to the College when you know of any alumnus or former student who enlists? Will you not forward in all news from the front? Will you not hold yourself personally responsible for seeing that each casuality is known at the College and recorded here?

For the older men of the alumni there is a second roll of patriots whose names will thrill us perhaps even more deeply than those of our fellow-graduates. These are the sons of graduates, those fine young fellows of the second generation, lads who may perhaps never have attended our Alma Mater, but who have imbihed her high traditions by inheritance, who are the expanding ripples in that wave of loyalty which it is her ultimate mission to send circling to every farthest strand of American life. Will you not send us word of your own sons, and of all the descendants of alumni whom you know, who have thus proved an hereditary right to be enrolled among us. The editor knows by personal acquaintance that David Wheeler, son or Everett P. Wheeler, '56, served in an English regiment and was seriously wounded last spring: that both Kingsley Noble and Kendrick Noble, sons of Henry Noble, '30, have enlisted, and a third son may be drafted; that the two sons of William Campbell, '78, have both enlisted. But this bonor roll must be many times as long, and we want to publish to the world every last word of its glory-and to let its sorrow also echo in each fraternal heart. The present hour, dear brothers, is as sad as it is sublime and stern.

Our alumni have still only the obit uaries of peace wherewith to darken one small corner of this page. The only recorded death during the summer that touched closely upon the war was that of William Jones of the mer that touched closely upon the war was that of William Jones of the class of '17. Last spring he secured an appointment to the officers' training camp at Plattsburg, passed all the difficult tests and searching examina-tions, and left the College proud and tions, and left the College proud and eager and happy as a young man could be. WHAT OUR MEN ARE DOING

in Private Life

One striking tendency sprung apparently from the war is showing rather oddly among our alumni. Those who have names of German flavor are seeking to change them. We have heard of three or four such cases which are still incomplete, and there are two at least which have been publicly announced. Dr. Gustav Fisch-COLOTRY.

Equally in the service of his country died Professor Charles Parnily (S. He had been working for the new engineering courses, of which he was the head. He had also been aiding the Government in portions of the census work. While seeking a brief rest in the country he was suddenly stricken by a cerebral hemorrhage, and died as any man might wish to die were it not for the agony to loved ones left behind, died as abruptly as if by a fash of lightning. The proud record of Professor Parnily's service and efficiency.

OUR THREE IDEALS Did you hear President Mezes' Speech at our Charter Day luncheon last May? So many of those who States and their members. heard, declared it a classic worthy of permanent preservation and remembrance, that The Campus secured a tion. I wish I could hope to impress you as I have been impressed on looking back upon them. I wish I could face this occasion with the lion-like head of a Webb, the silver tongue of a Finley, and the golden heart of a Werner. Only so could justice be done to this historic occasion. As it is, I must speak to you in the sober role of a philosopher, who seeks to extract from this great past the epitome of its lessons, in order that it may guide us into a future worthy of tome of its lessons, in order that it tome of its lessons, in order that it may guide us into a future worthy of the College; for except as a guide to the future, our study of the past is a matter of creditable, but not very useful curiosity.

And so our three ideals interlock and, taken together, constitute the triune galaxy of guiding stars that has made our College great, and has made our College great, and has

have been our guiding stars; the ideals of DISCIPLINE, of CULTURE and of CITIZENSHIP. Each is fine. and of CITIZENSHIP. Each is fine, each complements the others, and all together they form an unsurpassed inspiration for a great institution.

"Under the ideal of DISCIPLINE we have been taught to attend to our business with precision and adequacy.

business with precision and adequacy. And we have been further taught to attend to our business, and not to the business of others; to do our part, to see to it that those for whom we are responsible do their part, and to fol-low the suggestions and orders of those above us who are charged with supervising us. But, important as discipline is, uninspired by culture and loyalty, it degenerates into blind, mands and visionless punctilio.

"Under the great ideal of CULTURE, the College has sought to impart to its students well-organized and mellowed knowledge of the fundamen-tals in some important field of learning, and expert skill in using that knowledge. It has sought to give a rich background of learning and aptitude that would give proportion and perspective to the lives and actions of perspective to the lives and actions of its students in college and after they have left the college halls. But culture without discipline easily degenerates into aimless futility and mere virtuosity of learning and skill. And culture without the enriching and solf-aparticular titled of levelty to self-sacrificing ideal of loyalty, too often becomes unimportant and scarcely respectable dilettanteism.

"And what shall I say of our greatest ideal, the ideal of CITIZENSHIP AND LOYALTY, which is growing greater and richer before our eyes from month to month and almost from day to day? It has always become day to day? It has always inspired day to day? It has always inspired the Collego and guided it, but we are now beginning to understand the scope and depth of its appeal as nover before. It calls upon us first for loyalty to our city through the College that makes us fit to sarve. But it also that makes us fit to serve. But it also calls upon us for loyalty to the State that makes us fit to serve. But it also calls upon us for loyalty to the State and to the nation, and, high above the nation, to all mankind. It devolves upon us the duty of doing our part to make each body politic strong and sound and worthy, and, if we may be so privileged, of aiding in establishing over the nations and among them some peace-assuring, beneficient organization. For such mighty tasks, Alma Mater has made her children alort by teaching them the noble lession that each loyalty, and for even the highest of these great tasks she has fitted a Goethals and some others among her sons, whose names will occur to all of you.

SPORTING COMMENI

ALL'S QUIET ALONG THE POTOMAC. After publishing broadcast that remarkable document, that epoch-making manifesto, in which he admonishes his besiegers to "be patient and rest assured that our gymnasium will be the scene of many interesting conflicts," friend Harold, he of the newly acquired foliage (have you seen it?) drafts some musty letter files into service, types off a couple of epistles, and sits back and waits. Things are quiet, and Mr. Lifton's policy will be one of watchful waiting.

So while there is tranquility, will the manager of the varsity basketball team of C. C. N. Y. give ear?

The season last year, began early in Decomber and ended early in March, three months. The sport that made City College famous lasted but one fourth of a calendar year, and three-eights of the college year.

After that thrilling finish with Pennsylvania last season, hardly a fan but was sorry that the basketball semester was over. Everybody wanted more. And who is the court of last resort if not the famished fan?

The season should be lengthened by a month; that is, tack on two weeks before December and add on two we es in March, thus running the sport over a period of half the college year.

Four more weeks of basketball mean four more weeks of the strong college spirit which, sorry to relate, invariably, though not so inevitably, wanes with the passing of the sport. Four more weeks mean at least that many more games, and the council of the Athletic Association knows what that means in the way of U.S. currency, and how far this added increment will

The absolute discontinuance or partial curtailment of football this year in other institutions must necessarily react to the advantage of basketball which has not suffered such severe losses in personnel. For the game will assume more importance, in some places paramount, resulting, therefore, in the several managements being more than willing to enlarge the season's

It would be a good idea too, since conditions at many institutions will require the dropping of travelling as a practice for teams, to do a little more travelling. Breaking the monotony of home games at stretches of three or four weeks wilfbring a bigger crowd to the other contests, because after each absence of our boys, the crowd would come back to see them with a The Place to Get a Good Sandwich

The management should remember that more basketball means more money in A. A. coffers and more spirit.

TWO OF OUR ALUMNI men who have held the front rank of position and popularity in City College athletic circles toured these parts last week. And believe us, we were glad to see them. Vic Smith is out in business, while Is. Ornstein is plugging Blackstone at N. Y. U.

"THROUGH SUFFERING some losses, our basketball team looks as if it will make a strong bid this year against even the best opposition." That's what our printer had us say last week in this tower. But obviously there was just an R too much in that first word. Teams may improve by losses in members, but we can't see any advantage accruing from the absence, say, of a pair of forwards, a center and a couple of guards. If we followed the path of folly which other columnists have beaten and a last line to this, we would make a bee line for the printer's.
